Senior Class Poem

We're the happy class of twenty-nine,
We've studied, and played but now it's time
To give our crutch to some one else,
And cry! "I know I can do it myself".
We've stood up tall like the giant oak,
We took our bumps and carried our yoke;
And now like one that's going astray
We start through the world with its pathless way.
T's is a great life we're here to live
Greater yet, if we're here to give,
Just look the old world in the eyes
And smile, that's where our beauty lies.
Life's a great game if you wish to play,
But remember it's not like a holiday
The way is not cut, and dried and laid,
It's like a canal, it must be made.
But close your doors, to that mischiefimp,
Who say's come on it's fun to limp,
For once he gets you with his powerful grip,
Your feet just seem to slip and slip.
T's is our advice to our friends and foes
So take it from the class who knows,
Be square and fair and hit the mark
You'll never be groping in the dark.
We love you with all the love we possess,
Our wishes of luck are numberless,
But hardest of all is to say good-bye
Ah! I see a tear drop dims each eye.

CLASS MOTTO: "The door to success is labeled "PUSH"! Let's Go."

FOUR short years ago, forty-six shy and bashful Freshmen slowly dragged their once lively feet toward the large assembly, where they were very self-conscious of all the glances of upper classmen, as they seemed to say, "Just Green Freshmen."

We, however, summoned up courage to organize. We chose Magdalene Crowell as president.

As a motto for our high spirited class we chose, "The door to success is labeled, "PUSH!" Let's Go!" It proved a good one so we decided to keep it during all our four years.

Our class proved to be talented in music and athletics, as the music ability was soon displayed in the High School Band, Orchestra and Chorus.

In our Sophomore year we thought a variety in class presidents would prove effective so we chose Bob Dively as president with Miss Nelson as guardian.

This year our athletic ability began to show itself as we won the Class Championship in Basket Ball.

As we were growing more used to the school routine, so now we could look down on the Freshmen, this making us feel more dignified.

Thirty-one very lively Juniors marched with heads held high and hearts beating rapidly, to the smaller assembly.

This time our class came to the parting of ways, some taking College Preparatory work and some taking Commercial work, each section endeavoring hard to do better than the other.

We chose Irene Bucholtz as president with Mr. Barr as guardian.

We Juniors tried being boss but we soon found the teachers and Seniors endeavoring very hard to change our mind. We worked hard against our opposition and we feel that we won.

Twenty-eight lively but dignified Seniors feel that we have the opportunity of giving advice to our lower class men which we very readily take advantage of.

Our class feels very proud of our athletes as Weaver, Dively, Leady, Huber, Elleman, Rabenstein and Cencebaugh very well represent the Football Squad. In Basketball we held a place being represented by Dively, Leady and Rabenstein with Elleman as the goat. We also are proud to think of our class as being the first to have girls in the High School Band and Orchestra. We are also proud of our boy's winning the Class Basketball Tournament in '27 and '29.

We feel the High School is proud of the examples we have tried to set for others. We have profited by other's mistakes and hope other classes will profit by ours.

As we leave, teachers will sigh partly in sadness and partly in relief.

We feel we have written a chapter in the history of the High School that gives credit to the Class of '29 and also to the School.

MOTTO: "We need no comment, we speak for ourselves."

WE entered as all other classes have and will, as Freshmen. We were treated quite mean, we thought. But it didn't seem to keep us from showing that we were not to be pushed back.

Then came our Sophomore year, we were quite ancient then, you know.

Now we are Juniors. Our class has distinguished itself with its orators, leaders, musicians, athletes and law making students. We are looking forth to a greater year in 1930. We are not to be laughed at.

Sophomores

Sophomore Class History

ONE year ago last September, fifty-six verdant Freshmen entered High School. The fact that we were the largest class of Freshmen in the history of the school, gave us encouragement to bear up under the jokes and taunts of the Upper Classmen.

In a few days we held a class meeting and elected the following officers: Kenneth Rabenstein, president; Gerald Lehman, vice president; Olive Hartle, secretary and Stanley Puterbaugh, treasurer. We chose for our motto: "No steps backward, forward always," and for class adviser, Miss Yager.

We are now sophisticated Sophomores and have learned among other things that Woman Suffrage is the process of making women stay in the house and wear veils, and that the Acropolis is a great Greek statesman.

We have begun to think school isn't such a bad thing after all, (Why shouldn't we think so, we have to just the same?) so we have started in again, this time with the knowledge that we are to have the fun of initiating the Freshmen.

At our first class meeting as Sophomores, we elected as officers: our old president, Kenneth Rabenstein, a newcomer Rebecca Detrick, vice president; Ruth Royer, secretary; Olive Hartle, treasurer. We also chose a new motto: "Step by step we advance." And Miss Helvern as class adviser.

The first week was spent getting ready for the real work that was soon to follow; buying books, finding seats, and learning the schedule. We knew all of our teachers, but the new coach (Albert McGlashan) and before long we too were friends.

With order, holidays, school and exams, we hope to find ourselves holding eight or more credits or the Junior rating. Like the year previous we hope it will be all of us, not just a few, this year and the two to come.

The Club meets every Monday night at the "Y" at which time there are very interesting discussions. The Club presented a play, "My Yankee Lad", which went over with a big success.

The purpose of the Hi-Y Club is, "To create, maintain and extend throughout the school and community, high standards of christian character." It stands for Clean Speech, Clean Athletics, Clean Scholarship and Clean Living. Each member does his best to uphold these standards.

Le Cercle Francais

LE CERCLE FRANCAIS was organized the first part of the year by the Senior French class. We decided to meet every two weeks at the homes of the members where we would study the book, "Landmarks of French Literature." At each meeting when roll was called each member responded with a French proverb, joke or Current Event which was taken from "Petit Journal." This was followed by the Business meeting and Educational program after which we played French games.

DIRECTOR—DWIGHT BROWN

BRADFORD High School has reason to be proud of her Band; it took first prize in Darke County, at Greenville, October 31. If circumstances permit Bradford will be represented in the State Band Contest this year. One unusual distinction this year, is that there are now five girl members of the Band. The Band has given concerts, played at football games and in every way made Bradford High School proud of it.

Social Activities

SENIOR COMMERCIAL AND FRENCH CLUB PARTY

THE Senior Commercial and French Clubs met at Eleanor Armour's for a party on November 21, 1928. After the business meetings of the two clubs, everyone joined to help Eleanor celebrate her birthday. One of the outstanding events of the evening were the selections rendered by the male Senior chorus. Their favorite and best selection given was "She Knows It". You should have heard them!

Then came the eats. And Oh, but they were good. But, we finally had to stop, and feeling that we'd had a good time, went home. We wish there would be lots of surprises.

IRENE BUCHOLTZ.

The student gets all the credit,
The school gets all the fame,
The printer gets all the money,
But the staff gets all the blame.

Seniors were made for great things,
Juniors were made for small,
But we haven't yet discovered
Why Sophs were made at all.

A freshie stood on the burning deck—
As far as we seniors could learn,
He stood in perfect safety,
He was too green to burn.

There are letters of accent,
There are letters of tone,
But the best way to let 'er,
Is to let 'er alone.

R. Woods (watching airplane): Gosh I'd hate to be up there with that thing.
Nick. C.: Well, I'd sure hate to be up there without it.

Mr. Snyder (History Class): It took more than one man to push that Railroad across the continent.

Miss Davidson: Pete, describe London in the time of Chaucer.

Pete: I can't.

Miss Davidson: Why?

Pete: I wasn't born yet.

Mr. Perry (in chapel): What do you want to sing?

Boys: Ninety-four.

Mr. Perry: Don't be so loud we can hear you. Now what did you say?

More Fun--You Can't Miss It

HIGH SCHOOL HALLOWE'EN PARTY

October 30, 1928 at High School Building

AS an effect of this sign being placed on the blackboard, about one hundred-fifty high school students and teachers gathered at the High School Building, October 30, to celebrate Hallowe'en.

Of course, Hallowe'en wouldn't be celebrated correctly if one entered buildings in the proper way, so we had to make a detour, coming in at the north door. Here we were accosted by all manner of characters; ghosts, Red Riding Hood, turkish ladies, dutch maids, old men and women, clowns, soldiers and sailors and some unnamable objects. After some waiting we were divided into small parties and conducted on a tour through the building. In one room as we entered, a gust of hot wind blew in our faces. We were told to be seated; we did so, but immediately arose again, for the chair was hot. In another room we were seated in a circle, with our hands under a large sheet. The one in charge let us feel the parts of a cat. We left without being coaxed! In another room lay a corpse on a table. The ghost keeping watch sang us a dirge all about what would happen when we died. Feeling rather weak-kneed, we left there and descended to the lower hall. Just as we left the steps we were on, bounced around in a terrible fashion. (In the daylight, it proved to be only bed springs). Then we were taken outside to be frozen to death, but our guide had pity on us and slipped us in the furnace room door. But, he was in "cahoots" with the spirits for it proved to be a long, low tunnel. Crawling out of that we were allowed to enter the gym, which was dressed in corn fodder.

When everyone had arrived we held a grand march. The following people were awarded prizes; Eleanor Armour, most original, Irene Bucholtz, funniest; Lawrence Burgher, most horrible.

We all unmasked and Oh, what a relief! We were honored by the visit of several well known spirits, called forth by a fat grinning witch.

Then the best part—Eats—. The refreshments were apples, doughnuts, candy and cocoa. Did we enjoy them? Here's hoping for more good times, such as this in the future.

Finding Captain Kidd's Treasure

I WENT to visit my girl friend who lives in southern Georgia. Her parents are not wealthy although they own almost one thousand acres of cotton land.

To save traveling thirty miles on gravel road, it is more convenient to go five miles by boat from the nearest village to her home. Her home is one of the old colonial mansions of the southern United States. A two-story white frame with a low, balcony around the sides and back. The front of the house faces the river that empties into the bay directly at the right of the house. On the left side of the house are two rows of cottages, much the worse for wear, in which the servants of the plantation live.

Before we go farther into the story, I will introduce you to one of the servants who lives in the farthest house down the row, which stands out along near the five acres of woods. Aunt June, as everybody calls her, is believed to be the oldest person in Georgia. She is black and very wrinkled. Her eyes, once a beautiful brown and very sparkling, are now dim. Her hair is as white as the cotton that grows in the fields.

In the night and wee hours of morning Aunt June may be seen prowling around in and out of the forest, especially if it is raining or if there is a storm. People say she is mentally unbalanced, but as soon as I met her, I knew she was not, but that she had something on her mind that she wanted to tell. Being neither able to talk or write, she had no way to unload her trouble.

Dorothy, my girl friend, told me that when her grandfather was a little boy, his mother told him that Aunt June was struck on the head by a man so they thought, when she was out gathering sticks. Aunt June was found senseless under a big maple tree near a little brook, which is about a quarter of a mile from the main river. Dorothy says since that time on, so she was told, June neither talked nor, if she hears, she does not respond. It is to this same tree where she was found senseless that she goes on her night ramblings. To me it seemed that she went there to guard something.

Jim, a boy who lives several rods down the road, across the river from "Dot" invited us to go with him on a trip up stream about five miles, to one of the neighbor's on an errand.

Dorothy asked Uncle Ned to go along. Now, Uncle Ned is an old darky who seems to be next to Aunt June in age and Solomon in wisdom, Uncle Ned knew every bush, and tree, and seemingly every blad of grass from the beginning to the end of the river.

Bright and early next morning Dot, Jim, Uncle Ned and I started in a six passenger motor boat up stream. Conversation flowed freely between us of everything but nothing in particular.

"I tells you it sure am goin' to rain I jus' feel 't in ma' bones. I lib many a long year and I's know all bout da weath's."

"Oh, please, Uncle Ned, don't spoil our day by some of your old foolish talk. You may know all about the weather, but I hope you miss it today. and you will. Look the sun is shining so bright.

THE RÉSUMÉ

"At's jus' de reason Miss Darthy, at's jus' de touble. That are sund am shinen, too bright for dis 'ere day. Lookit, see the riddish cloud ober yonder? Well! when you see a red cloud and de sun am shinnin' bright, jus' you all look out for worse rain dan we eber hab."

"Say Dot, may be it will rain, and if it storms, we may not only get wet, but water on all sides at once does not look tempting to me, for I'm no fish."

"Now Jim, the least said by you the better, and I don't care a snap what you say. Rain or shine, boating is bound to be an adventure."

"Yes, Miss Darthy, 'ats jus' it. a much adventure sometimes."

"Uncle Ned, will you and Jim kindly drop the subject? If you don't you will have us girls scared out of our wits."

Uncle Ned and Jim did drop the subject then we came in sight of the neighboring plantation.

I was introduced to the master and mistress. They proved to be very kind people.

While Uncle Ned and Jim tended to business, Dot and I went in search of our youthful host, who was not aware of guests. At last we found him under a cotton cart fixing an axle. For all the dirt and grease he was quite a handsome boy.

Dot invited him over for the next afternoon. She said that Jim would come, because, well, he nearly lived at her house anyway, all but his clothes.

With the promise from Norman to be there at two the next afternoon, we left for home. The sky began to get dim as though night was falling.

"See dare, I tol' you, now. We better hurry long 'ome or we sure am goin' to get dukin' sure as shootin', and no sooner said than done it seemed as though the very heavens opened.

Jim pulled at the tiller with all his might and swung ashoreward. We landed about half a mile from "Silverhook Plantation" Dorothy's home.

When we landed, the boat was damaged, and would be no use to us any more, so we let it drift down stream with the river. By this time the rain was coming down in torrents, it fairly beat us to the ground.

After hours, it seemed to us, we reached the house. The rain fell in earnest and by evening all the help and neighbors living in lower land filled the house. That night fifteen colored women and girls slept in the loft because the bedrooms were filled to overflowing with people, black and white, who slept wherever they could stretch. That is, they tried to sleep, because the howling of the wild wind, the claps of thunder, the falling of trees and beating of rain was enough to make any brave-hearted person quiver with fright. Toward morning the storm began to clam and sleep became possible.

Dot and I did not get up until nine o'clock. It was still drizzling rain. To our surprise we found about twenty new comers in the house. That is, people who came while we were abed.

At nine-thirty Dorothy's Aunt Mary, with the help of a few others, began to pass out hot coffee and bread. Everyone declared it the most delicious coffee ever made, but personally I thought it the most bitter.

THE RÉSUMÉ

Norman and his parents came at noon. They said they had been washed out. Jim also was at Dot's because it was impossible for him to get home.

Someone, I don't know who, missed Aunt June. The men went out to hunt for her. I think the hunt lasted until four o'clock. At last in came three men bearing Aunt June's body. They said they found her under the old tree by the brook.

Dot, Jim, Norman and I put on slickers and went to the old tree. We found Aunt June's "Conjun-bag" (a sack containing odds and ends, which were to be charms. She was said to be a witch doctor). We opened it. First, Jim pulled out a letter. It was written in French. Norman knew all about that, so he translated it to us. It proved to be a letter from Dot's great great Uncle. Later we found he had given it to Aunt June the night she was injured. (He disappeared after, this and was never heard of again.)

Next a paper with the words "Big tree, by brook, inside," was found.

"Could anything be hidden inside the old hollow tree?" asked Norman. "What?" asked Dot. "Hey! Norman what hollow tree?"

"Why the one behind you, of course," replied Norman.

"Hollow?" That tree hollow? Why Norman, have you lost your senses?"

"Now listen! Jim and I have known that has been hollow, for a long time, and we were going to tell you girls today. Well, you know now, so have you any objection to our looking to see if there is anything inside of that tree?"

"Oh come on Dot," I exclaimed. "Let's don't let the boys get the best of us, I know what. Let's get the bucksaw and let the boys saw it down."

"Now you're talking," said Norman. And get the saw we did. By six o'clock we had the tree down, and there in the hollow stump lay the remains of an old chest, and around it money and jewels.

The boys got sacks from somewhere and we toted our treasure home.

GLADYS WALLACE, '32.

Winter is Here

Corn cutting time is over,
The leaves are falling fast.
The farmers are through with their labors,
And winter comes at last.

The days are getting shorter,
And in the night when all is still,
The snow flies around the house,
And falls on the window sill.

The birds have all gone to the southland.
And will not come back 'till spring.
And the brooks that are all frozen over,
Will not thaw till it gets spring again.

ERNEST DETRICK.

THE RÉSUMÉ

After the Manner of Tennyson

Oh, we tarry on the threshold, watch the dawning of day,
And we feel the urge of conquest as it calls us on our way.

Opportunity is beckening, there are battles to be won
In the day that comes before us, with the rising of the sun.

And the trumpet call to duty as it sounds upon the dawn,
With a challenge clearly spoken finds us eager to be gone.

We are anxious—still we tarry, for our feet reluctant stand
At our Alma Mater's portals. We shall miss her guiding hand.

She has shielded us and taught us, through the recent passing years;
She has echoed all our laughing and has pined beneath our tears.

We have labored for her glory and the honors that we earned;
We have yielded to our Mater and we find them thrice returned.

Can it be we pass forever from her fond and loving care?
Yes, we go, and in our passing, Mater dear, we breath a prayer.

In the future swiftly dawning, Alma Mater, you shall know
Classes most as wise as we are—every year they come and go.

They are coming—we are going; they are happy—we regret
'Midst the many that shall follow, Mater dear, you may forget.

Though the beam of fate, to sorrow through the future should incline,
We'll remember you, my Mater, with a love that's all divine.

And we pray the God of Wisdom to be light in his disdain,
So that memory may remind you that we did not pass in vain.

And we hope that while we're toiling to the heights where we aspire
Our resolves shall catch the spirit of your inspiration's fire.

What is fame but empty glory of a world that's swelled with pride,
Crown the tomb with wreaths of laurel for a genius is inside.

No, false fortune, genius left him when he drew his latest breath;
Carve his tone with storied virtues, you have lost the game—to death.

Sing his praises, speak his service, he is damp within his grave
Who refused to be, while living, base convention's idle slave.

'Tis but earnest brave endeavor that inspires that genius soul
He was stirred by dreams and visions that his heart could not control.

So with us, we are not striving to attain ambition's ends
But to help and heal the heart wounds in the bosoms of our friends.

THE RÉSUMÉ

Empty fame and worldly glory—not the goal we're striving toward;
We will keep the call of duty and shall reap a just reward.

As we tarry on the threshold—watch the dawning of OUR day
Ere we heed the urge of duty as it calls us on our way.

We are eager to be fighting in the ranks of those who do,
And we long to drop the old ways pushing forward with the new.

From your halls a dying whisper seems to call a soft "Good-bye."
And with saddened hearts we answer—"fare thee well, O Bradford High."

'Tis the end—and here around us is the only love we know;
Still we bravely stem our sorrow, face the rising sun and go.

MABEL ROUTSON.

ALGEBRA

Canto 1. Algebra! O cursed study Algebra.
What keeps me working late at night?
What shall turn my brown locks white
before their time? Algebra.

Canto 2. French and English, Chemistry,
All are very easy for me,
But when Algebra's on the list
I can't seem to get the gist.

Canto 3. Logarithms, exponents,
Coefficients borrowed and lent.
If sometimes my head appears shook,
Lay it on that Albegra book!

Canto 4. Now I lay me down to sleep
With my Algebra book at my feet.
We have class tomorrow afternoon
And I can see it will be my doom.

DWIGHT MOREHEAD.

WHEN SUMMER GOES

The skies are gray,
The leaves come down,
Bare branches sway,
Without a sound.

Where beauty cast,
Her lovely shield,
Now stock and mast,
Are all revealed.

'Tis autumn and
The trees all seem,
Gaunt things that stand
Above the scene.

O, such a change
From summer fair!
'Tis cold and strange,
And all is bare!

The chill winds hiss
Among the eaves,
Gay flowers we miss—
And singing leaves.

When summer goes,
Man plainly sees,
How much he owes
To flowers and trees.

EDNA JENNINGS.

The Confession of William Dane

EACH evening when William returned home from work he had to pass the old forsaken home of the deacon. The house was large and nestled among tall pines. It was ghostly-looking when unoccupied. The room in which the deacon had died was the front room next to the street.

On this particular evening, William had worked later than usual at the stock yards and it was quite dark when he passed the old forsaken house. He had a very queer, dreadful feeling as he neared the old house. He imagined he could see Silas sitting by the bedside of the deacon near the window. Such had been the scene when he himself had entered that room about one year previous. It haunted him; he ran the remainder of the way home.

Sarah was standing on the door-step waiting for him.

"Bless me, it's time you'r comin'. Why don't you hurry, when you know I'm goin' to a meetin' wi' the sisters o' the church?"

"Now, now, I'm runnin' to get here. Please, dear, don't be so cross. Business good, very good today," answered William handing her some money. But how did he get it? Did he weigh all the animals correctly?

William stayed at home that evening while Sarah went to the meeting. He sat down in front of the hearth and placed his head in his hands. Many were the thoughts that passed through his bewildered mind. Finally he decided that he must leave Lantern Yards.

Two weeks later they moved. It was a long and tiresome journey. Poor Sarah thought that William wanted to leave Lantern Yards and go to Greenstown where he could get a better position and thus give her a better home. But he wanted to forget, if such a thing were possible.

William had no difficulty in securing a position in the cattle yards. But it was not long before the owner discovered that William was not giving their customers a fair deal. He told William that he would not make his discovery known if he would leave town within two weeks.

"Sarah, I have bad and sad news to tell you. I've discovered today that I've been working for a swindler, thief and an outlaw, but we won't make it known. We shall leave here and go somewhere away from such criminals," William said when he broke the news to Sarah.

So they moved again. They moved several times within the next ten years. They finally moved to Gekerville where William worked as a butcher.

He was not satisfied with that trade, but Sarah encouraged him to keep on. He made enough money to keep up their little common home and to save just a little each month. Sarah insisted on the savings.

William had no chance to swindle the customers as he did only butchering. Ben Winters, a man of about fifty years, did all the buying and selling. He was William's boss as well as manager of the shop. He was tall and stately in appearance.

Ben Winter's wife was a rather small woman. She was convivial and very kind. Their home was not far from the home of Sarah and William; Susan, Ben's wife, and Sarah spent many happy afternoons together spinning and sewing for the poor and needy. They were known throughout the whole community for their kindness.

Sarah and William lived there and he worked for Winters' for nearly six years. And then Sarah began to notice that William was growing irritable and cross. He was only forty years old, but he looked and acted as if he were sixty. He wanted to quit and move again, but Sarah encouraged him to stay with Winters.

William worried very much about the stolen money. Suppose it should be found in the neighbor's orchard when they cultivated it. (He had buried it in the orchard beside a brush heap where he thought it would be safe.) But when his neighbor began to talk of clearing the orchard of brush and planting berries between the rows of trees, William grew desperate.

So one night when Sarah was not at home, he dug up the money, placed it in a tin box and hid it in the wall above their bed.

Each day he grew more irritable and dissatisfied. He often had nervous spells caused from dreams when Silas and the deacon would haunt him.

One day he was brought home by Mr. Winters and that night while in a nervous stupor, he uttered the last words that Silas had spoken to him. Sarah was shocked but did not suspicion him. She did not question him when he recovered because she feared that it might cause another spell.

They lived in Gekerville about ten more years. William's spells became more frequent and each spell grew worse than the previous one. Finally, William was forced to give up his work and they had to use their savings.

One night Sarah was awakened by a shrill cry which was the beginning of William's last spell. She hurried over to Winters and Ben went for the doctor. But before the doctor came, William called Sarah to him.

"There is no use to get him, it is my last. But I've one more thing to say to you before-before—. Look in the wall above the bed. Here is the key as to open it. You will know the rest. It is the money I stole and framed the blame on Silas. If you ever happen as to be seenin' him, tell him I was sorry and I paid it full; forgive me please, Sarah. That is all, Oh-h," those were William's last words.

"Yes, yes, William," was her answer as she looked into his eyes for the last time and then laid him down as he closed his eyes forever.

Sarah threw her hands to her mouth to muffle the scream as she fell over the bed beside her dead husband. She wept bitterly; it was indeed a great shock.

Sarah did not tell Ben and Susan of the guilt of William. She asked them to take him back to Latern Yards.

So yet that night, Sarah, Ben and Susan started the long journey back to Latern Yards with the body of William. They had to go in a big wagon. The trip was long and tiresome, and before they reached their destination, Sarah retreated to the bed of straw beside the body of her criminal husband. They arrived in Latern Yards early on the second morning.

That afternoon William was buried in the Lanter Yard grave-yard beside his father and mother.

Susan and Ben bade Sarah goodbye and they retraced their trip back to Latern Yard.

That evening when Sarah and her aged mother, with whom Sarah was to live in the future, were seated before the hearth, Sarah showed her mother the tin box and said sorrowfully, "Mother, it was William who framed Silas and stole the money. He confessed just before he died. Here it is. What shall I do with it?"

It was decided that she give it back to the church.

Silas was constantly on Sarah's mind.

She devoted much of her time to church work such as she had done in Gekerville.

The day that Silas and Eppie came back to Lantern Yards, Sarah was spinning. She was sitting by the window where she had a complete view of the street. She looked down at the cloth when they were passing and looked up again just to get a glimpse of them. She did not recognize him at the time, but upon second thought, she knew it was Silas. She ran to the door, but they had passed the corner and were no longer in sight.

She wrote hastily a note to her mother, and prepared to follow them. She knew that to disappear from sight, they must turned to the right at the corner. She turned in that direction and stopped to inquire at a farm house.

"Did you happen as to see a gal and an old man of about sixty pass this way?" she asked.

"Yes um, yes um, when I be in the orchard they passed," was the answer, she received.

She saw footprints in the dust on the road, which she believed to be their tracks. She followed the footprints in the dust all day until the sun started to retreat downward. She grew worried. She had not realized until then how far she had gone. She decided to stop at a farm house which was close and seek shelter for the night. The next day she would return home with no hope of ever seeing Silas again.

"Madam, could you give me shelter for the night? I've been traveling but tomorrow I'm going back. I shall pay you well. I hope you can grant my wish," she asked.

"Sure, sure, my dear, always room fur one more," was the kindly answer, she received from the lady of the farmhouse.

The lady ushered her into the house.

"We've other company for the night. Will you not go in and tell 'em as to who you be? They be in there," said the lady pointing to a door at her left. She then excused herself to prepare the evening meal.

Sarah slowly opened the door to behold a man and a girl sitting with their backs toward her, on a roughly made bench, looking out of the window over the landscape to watch the sunset.

"Pardon me, I hope I'm not interrupting. I'm also a border for the night," she managed to say.

"Not at all," answered Silas, turning to face her. Then he recognized her. He sprang from the bench and they met in the middle of the room with a haven't-seen-you-for-a-long-time handshake.

Seated between them on the bench, Sarah told the complete story of the confession and death of William. The news relieved Silas somewhat and yet it shocked him. And then he told Sarah about Eppie and her relatives.

The next morning Silas and Eppie continued their journey homward and Sarah returned to her mother.

Two hearts, were at ease for the rest of their days. Those were the hearts of Silas and of Sarah.

Class Prophecy

L ISTEN, oh ye men and women! Listen, all ye people of Bradford, and harken unto the words of your prophet, who now speaketh what hath been revealed unto her. For it has come to pass as in the days of the prophets of old, that the veil of the future hath been lifted, and the power hath been given unto me to prophesy unto you, what the glories of the years to come, shall be.

I heard a voice as from the heavens, as it spake unto me, "Harken unto me; hear my words. I will sepak unto you in a vision, I shall prophesy unto you as in a dream." Straightway, there appeared before mine eyes, the lovely form of an angel, the Spirit of Prophecy. Pointing with a commanding forefinger, she bade me look straightway into the future.

So I, even as the prophet Eliza, am able to prophesy unto you concerning the future of this, the brilliant and surely learned class of '29 of B. H. S.

As I gazed with wonder into the dim shadows of the future, I was able to discern familiar shapes of those who walked with me in the jolly days of B. H. S.

The first figure I was able to recognize among the deep shadows, was the upright form of our class president, Stanley Fifer. He was addressing the Senate with the same knowing manner which he so forcefully used when speaking to us in B. H. S. Strange to say, he was not as heavy as in the days of yore.

Of a sudden, the vision changed and I saw a large city, which I soon found to be Bradford. How it had grown! As I stared in wonder, at the size and beauty of the place, I noticed a great crowd on one of the main corners; and in a little house on wheels, was Earl Leady. He was selling sets of bed-time stories, suitable for persons from one to one hundred years of age. I imagine they were mostly like the stories he used to make up in French Club.

Suddenly the scene again changed, and I saw a strange and foreign country. In a settlement near a river, I saw Irene Bucholtz. She was working in foreign lands as a representative missionary. With my new vision, I could see far into the surrounding jungle. There, away back in an almost forgotten settlement, I saw Roxie Miller and Beulah Detrick, nurses, and Dale Elleman a doctor, caring for the survivors of an attempted massacre by the head-hunters.

As was to be expected, another scene floated before my eyes. It seemed to be Paris, France. I soon saw that four of the class of '29 were then in that city. Elizabeth Kisner and Elizabeth Davis were the feature dancers at the opening of a new Monte Carlo. Evelyn Fetter and James Teeter were on the same bill as Mme. and Monsieur Teeter. They were in concert work since James had succeeded Fritz Kriesler, with his violin.

The picture again changed and I saw into the First National Bank of New York City; and surprised was I to find Edward Fink as the President of the Bank. But prominence and city life had failed to spoil him. His private secretary entered as I watched and I was pleased to see that it was Margaret Davis. She, too, had retained her old ways.

Mabel Routson was at that time in New York, but she was preparing to leave for Paris, where she was to design dresses under the famous French designer Paul Pierot.

THE RÉSUMÉ

The picture shifted, and in the suburbs of New York, I saw a lovely cottage, and coming down the walk the likewise lovely housewife, Magdalene Crowell.

How happy I was to see her! But before I could give her some sign, that she might know I saw her, the scene changed, and I saw passing rapidly before me, the forms of other classmates in their chosen professions.

In Manchester, Indiana, Mary Berkebile was teaching school, and she certainly had the pupils walking the chalk-line.

Dorothy Glick evidently preferred the so called "love in a cottage", to a stenographer's life, for I found that shortly after her graduation, she had eased Raymond's mind.

Bob Dively was coaching at Harvard. It was due to excellent coaching that Harvard beat Yale.

Stranded in a little town in the west, I saw Harold Rabenstein. For the first time in his career, he had signed a contract with the wrong Lyceum Circuit; and now, for the first time in his indifferent life, he was declaring himself ready to settle down, if the right person asked him.

Pete Huber, in Bradford, was still making his nightly trips to Covington. The Bradford S. P. C. A., is talking of making "her" come to terms and ease Pete's heart.

I saw, too, that Dan Martin had bought out the Kroger, and A & P chain stores and combined them in the "Martin's". Things appeared to be humming.

The Montgomery & Ward Company gained an excellent floor walker, when Everett Overholser signed up to work for them in Piqua. James Shaffer is his assistant, and by helping each other they manage to make the round at least once a day. By the way when Elizabeth Kisner returns from Paris, they are to be married, "then", says James, I'll be on easy street."

Deloris Lyons is the only woman to fly a cross-continent passenger plane. She seems to be very happy until she gets above the clouds. But then, she says its too close to heaven and that she isn't ready to fly with her own wings yet.

Etoile Grise has pushed G. Eberle from her throne, and gained world wide fame. She is also known as the world's champion stenographer.

Dick Weaver, our former stammering French student, is an absent minded professor of Chemistry in one of our eastern colleges. It is said that he conducts classes while asleep.

I was told that Homer Cencebaugh was running a very prosperous paper factory. His main item of manufacture is the "CENCY DEMERIT PADS"; with an output of 50,000,000 a day, he finds that the demand is greater than the supply.

Since the surprising growth of Bradford, the radio owners decided that an efficient "Trouble man" was needed. So Carl Wombold was chosen to fill the position. As yet, there have been no complaints, other than that he can't talk and work at the same time.

Charles Dunham is situated in Dayton, naturally, and has just recently been chose as prosecuting attorney. We always did know that he could talk.

It is said that coming events cast their shadows before, then, surely only goodness and truth and prosperity can come to the fair and certainly talented members of the class of '29.

AN EMBARRASSING MOMENT

Mr. Snyder is my teacher,
I shall not pass,
He maketh me to prove dense equations,
He leadeth me to expose my ignorance before the class,
He maketh me to draw figures
On the board for my grades' sake,
Yea, though I study till midnight,
I shall gain no chemistry.
The molicular wts., bother me
And The Law of Multipal properties sorely trouble me;
He prepareth a puzzle for me
In the presence of mine enemies,
He giveth me low grades,
My work runneth under,
Surely zero and condition
Shall follow me all the days of my life,
And I shall dwell in the class of Chemistry forever!

Just as I finished writing this little sketch I had a feeling I was being watched.
I looked up and there was Mr. Snyder giving it the once over.

EMMETT BOYER.

AUTUMN

Oh! the sun rises over the hilltop
And smiles on the earth below.
It shines on the tints of autumn
And gives them a ruddy glow.
For Lo! the winter is coming
Coming with a leap and a bound.
But soon the snow will be seen
Fluttering to the ground.
But when the day is ended
And my weary mind is free,
I shall use my time for nothing
But to wander towards the lee.
Over the hills and the valley
Across a rippling stream,
There above the waters
A host of sunbeams gleam.
Then among the flowers
To the end of time—
Till I reach the beauty
Of this life sublime.
On and on I wander
'Til I have the woodland scene,
And upon the highest hilltop
There the golden sunset gleams.
And as I wonder Homeward
Thinking of this lovely sight,
The years have passed to many,
Still it lingers day and night.

Our Coach

MMR. McGLASHEN is a graduate of Wooster College. During his time there he received many high honors as an athlete. Not only was he recognized by his college but also by the state by being named on All Ohio Football Team during his senior year. Although this was his first year with us he turned out a first class football team and a basketball team that won the Miami County Tournament. He was not only a friend to the boys who participated in athletics but he was a friend to every boy and girl in High School. We hope his success will be as great out in life as it was this year with us.

Our Cheer Leaders

FIRST of all we had two; two varieties, male and female, slim and fat, light and heavy, a medium speaker with a melodious voice, a loud speaker with a deep bass voice. And they were right there with the goods.

Any where we might choose to assemble, our Cheer Leaders were there to encourage, to inspire, to pep into the game or undertaking.

They were faithful to their task always at the games on the gridiron, on the gym, and as we gathered in the assembly hall. Any where, everywhere, they were there with their smiling faces and hearty cheers.

The earth trembled and the stars came down as Fifer led us in the skyrocket—Boom!

It took extra space for Margaret when she led the Railroad yell.

Yes we will "Miss" Stanley in the years to come; but we are happy to think of Margaret leading us to victory next year.

So fare thee well Stanley. Hello! Margaret.

The Resume of the Football Season

THE "Black and Orange" opened their season, Sept. 21, with Celina at Celina. Bradford being set back by the Celinians by a score of 6—0. This game found many inexperienced men in the lineup. Both teams seemed evenly matched.

In first home game Bradford was defeated by the strong Greenville eleven 36—0. Greenville came to Bradford with one of the strongest teams they have had in years. Bradford was considerably outweighed by the Greenville eleven.

Journeying to Piqua, Bradford met their third set-back of the year 36—0. This game marked the first time that these two teams have ever met on the gridiron. Piqua's heavy and smooth working offense was too much for the "Black and Oranges" light and inexperienced eleven.

In its second home game Bradford defeated the Tipp City eleven 20—12. Both teams scored in the first quarter. No more scoring was done until later part of fourth quarter. Here Bradford scored two touchdowns to Tipp's one, making final score 20—12.

Journeying to Sidney the Bradford eleven upset the dope bucket by holding the strong Sidney eleven 7—0. This game was fought in a sea of mud. Bradford was considerably outweighed by the Sidney eleven. Sidney did not score until last five seconds of play.

Journeying to Arcanum the "Black and Orange" defeated the eleven of that city by a score of 6—0. Bradford completely out-played them. On a dry field Bradford undoubtedly would have scored a much more decisive victory but handicapped by the sticky mud were only able to score one touchdown.

The "Orange and Black" playing heads-up football tied the strong Fairmont eleven of Dayton 6—6. This was a hard fought game by both teams. Fairmont scored their touchdown in early part of game while Bradford scored theirs in last five minutes of play.

The thirteenth annual football game between Bradford and Versailles resulted in a 0—0 tie. Bradford kept the ball in Versailles' territory most of the time but did not have the punch to put it across. This game found six Seniors playing their last game for the "Black and Orange."

THE RÉSUMÉ

Senior Football Men

CAPTAIN RICHARD WEAVER—Center

Dick our fighting captain played a whale of a game at center. Dick has been a member of the varsity for three years. Each year he well earned his letter. We lose this valuable man by graduation.

HOMER CENCEBAUGH—End

This was "Cency's" first year with the squad but he played the game well. He always got through to break up many of the opponents plays. Homer installed lots of fight into the game. He well deserves his letter.

FERDINAND HUBER—Fullback

"Pete" our plunging fullback gave his opponents plenty to think about by his hard plunging. He was a hard man to stop. Pete was also a very valuable man on defense. His position will be hard to fill next year.

EARL LEADY—Halfback

Although his first year on the varsity "Earl" certainly showed his worth. He could kick, pass and carry the ball with much ability. He installed lots of pep and fight into the game. He will be greatly missed next year.

DALE ELLEMAN—Tackle

Dale was a mighty good tackle with plenty of fight all the time. His great hobby was to break up the opponents plays before they got started. He was a great asset to the team and next year he will be greatly missed.

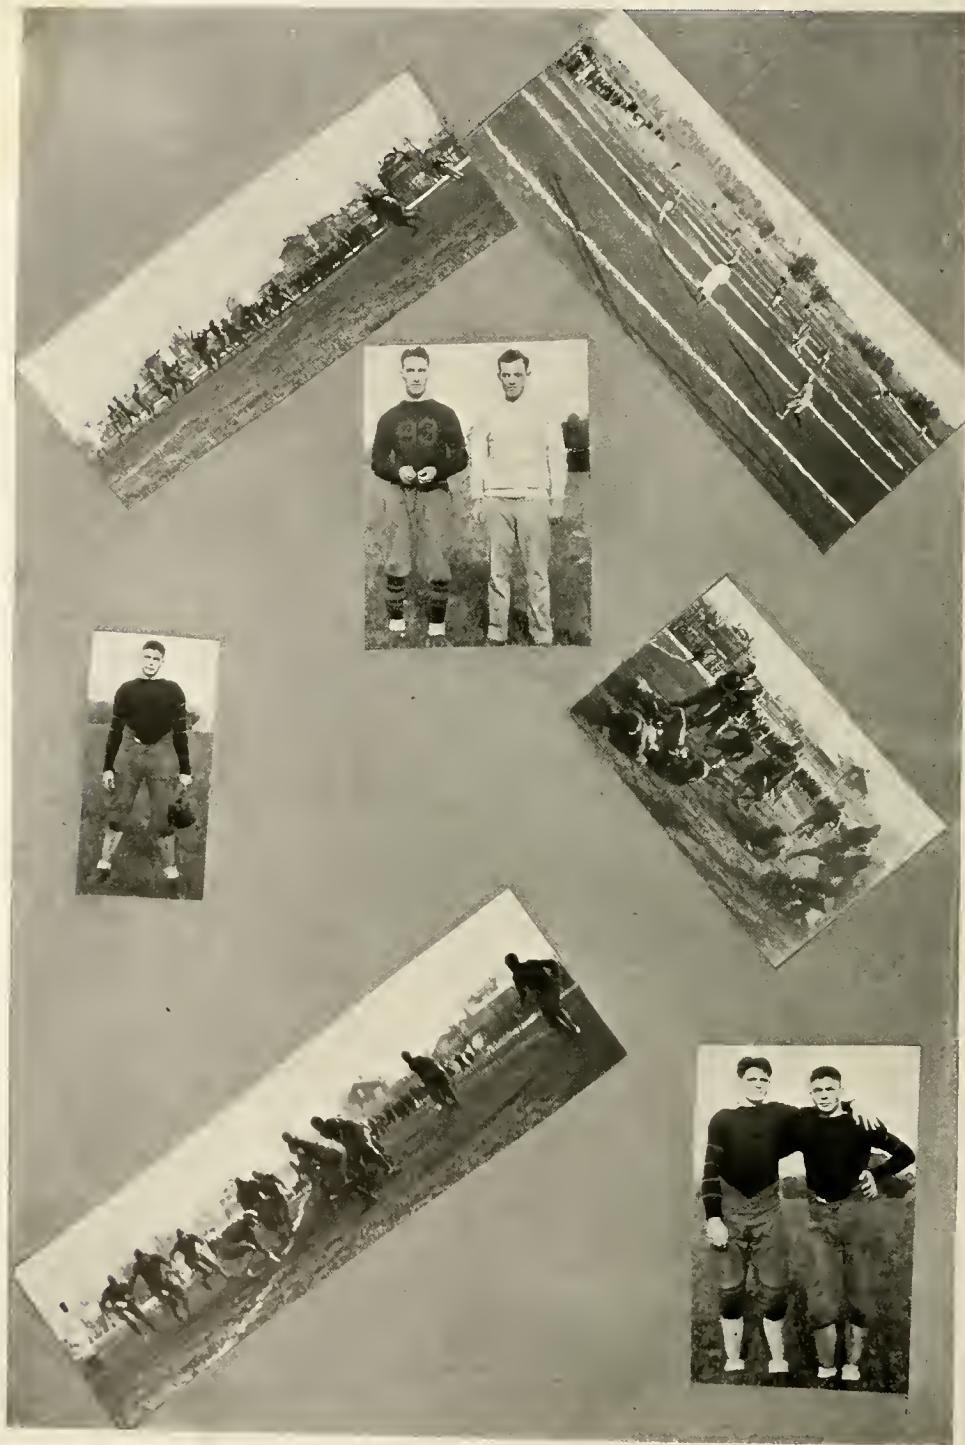

HAROLD RABENSTEIN—Guard

This was Harold's first year on the squad. Harold is rather small but he made up for that by his fight. He was a hard man to keep out of plays and was also able to take care of his man on offense. He will be greatly missed next year.

ROBERT DIVELY—Quarterback

Bob was the loud speaker of the team. Above the voices of the rooters you could hear Bob calling signals for the play. He was the hero of many a game. His hobby was snatching forward passed. His place will be hard to fill in the coming seasons.

DWIGHT MOREHEAD.

A GOOD SPORT

TO be called a good sport means more to an athlete than almost anything else that could be said about him; for he realizes that there are certain qualities which he must possess before he is so called. In the first place, a good sport must play the game and play it hard. He must be on the job every minute of the time doing what he is supposed to do and doing it well. Secondly, he must go in to win. Fear often times does more harm than the foe itself. He should not exult in the misfortunes of an opponent. Too often the remark is heard, "Well, if I can only knock so-and-so out, the game 'll be ours." If he can't meet his opponent fairly and squarely he deserves to lose. Last of all, a true sport is a loser who congratulates the winner on the good game he played; a loser who isn't continually making excuses and reverting to what "it might have been;" a loser who swallows all the bitterness he may feel and devotes all his energy to winning the next game.

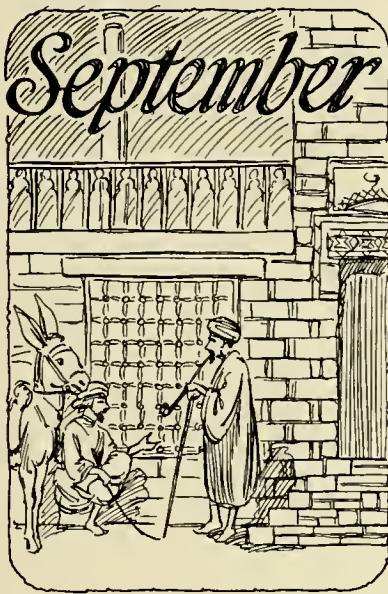

And so in life these same truths will apply,
The one who always keeps his goal in mind
Who mounts all obstacles however high
And leaves dishonesty and wrong behind
Though others threaten victory by their game
He, by his steadiness, the prize obtains.

MABEL ROUTSON.

THE RÉSUMÉ

We hear that Webster Idle, Kimmy Teeter, Harry Pugh and Dwight Morehead are trying to be heroes bold. They each ran a half mile through mud ankle deep to a burning house to rescue the occupants and when they got there it was nothing but a straw pile in the middle of a field.

Coach (in test): Opal, why did the Spartan boys exercise so much?

Opal Witwer (absent mindedly): To become round-shouldered.

Miss Helverm (Domestic Science examination): Name the two classes of batters. Give examples.

Miss Helverm (same examination): Name two beverages.

Coach: Ale and Beer.

Miss Helverm (In the same examination): What are the two ways in which to buy food? Which is the best way?

Coach: Charge it and pay for it. Charge it always. Gee, you ask the dumbest questions; anyone could answer them.

Echoes from Roosevelt

Hello, my fellow students,
I greet you one and all;
My thoughts are with you often,
Though many duties call.

I will not let mere pleasure,
Nor distance part us yet:
To spoil our happy friendship
Made, in dear old B. H. S.

The tidal wave of friendship
Comes in with friends so kind.
I'll always remember the ones back home,
In the school I left behind.

The teachers helped me out of ruts,
To them I owe much praise.
They taught me English and Geometry,
In Freshman, Sophomore days.

I've admired the harmonious spirit
That Bradford's shown to me;
The loving, kind, respectful way
The "kids" have treated me.

I've often thought in silent hours
Of the times we spent together.
Of the surprise you gave me once,
And how cold,—I mean, the weather.

Those were times that ne'er re-appear,
'Tis sad when you stop to think
How soon our paths will go different ways,
When life with our vocation link.

If any petty little things
Have e're between us stood,
Let us forget them all right now
And remember all things good.

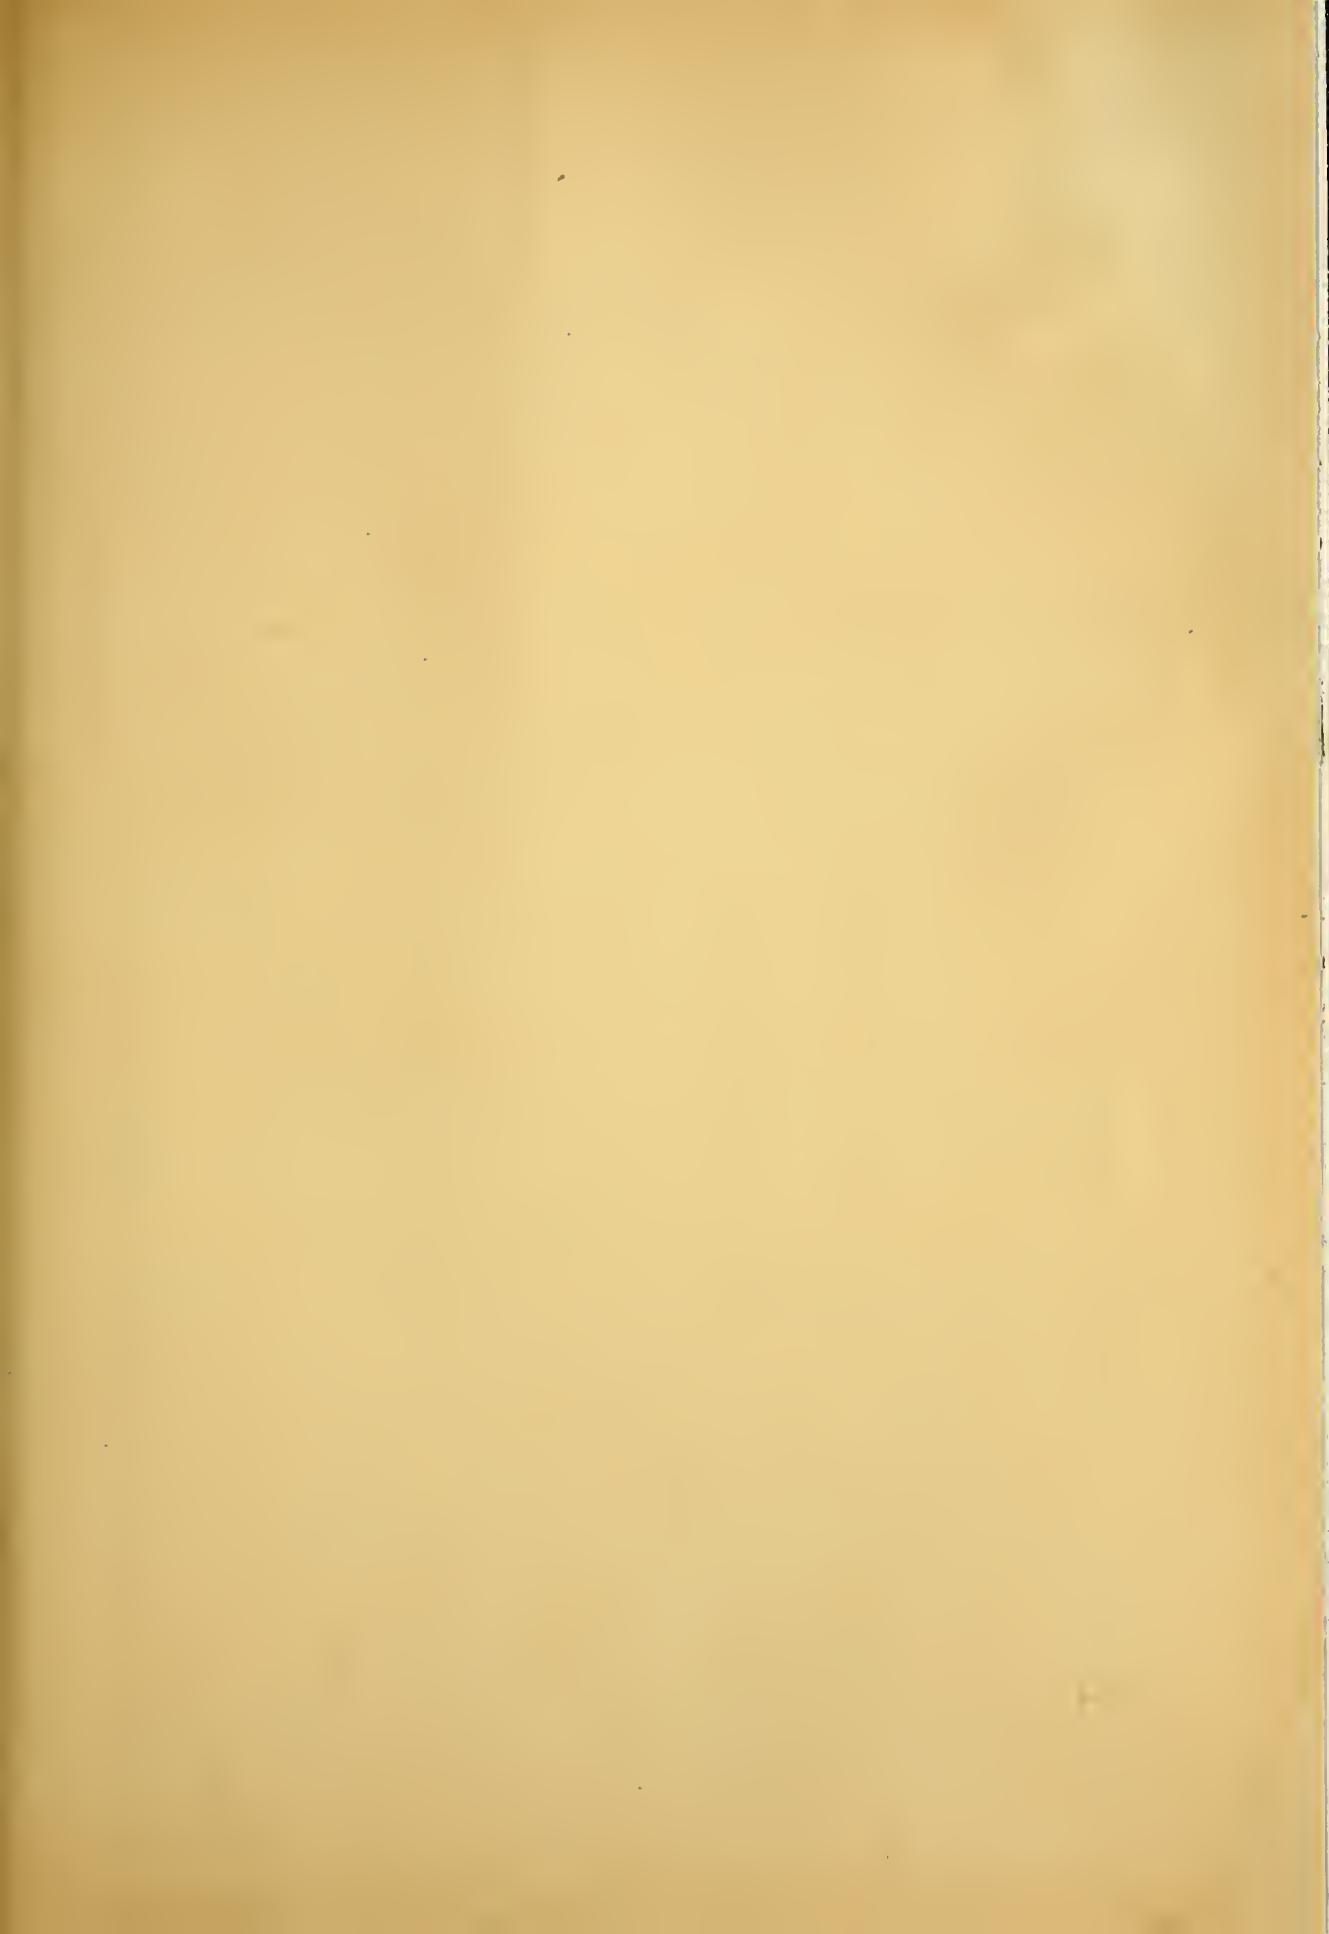

For after all, my friends are there
In dear old B. H. S.
So echoes from Roosevelt
Will harm you none, I guess.

Fare-ye-well, my fellow students,
And the class of twenty-nine.
Heavy burdens now await us
As we fall into the line.

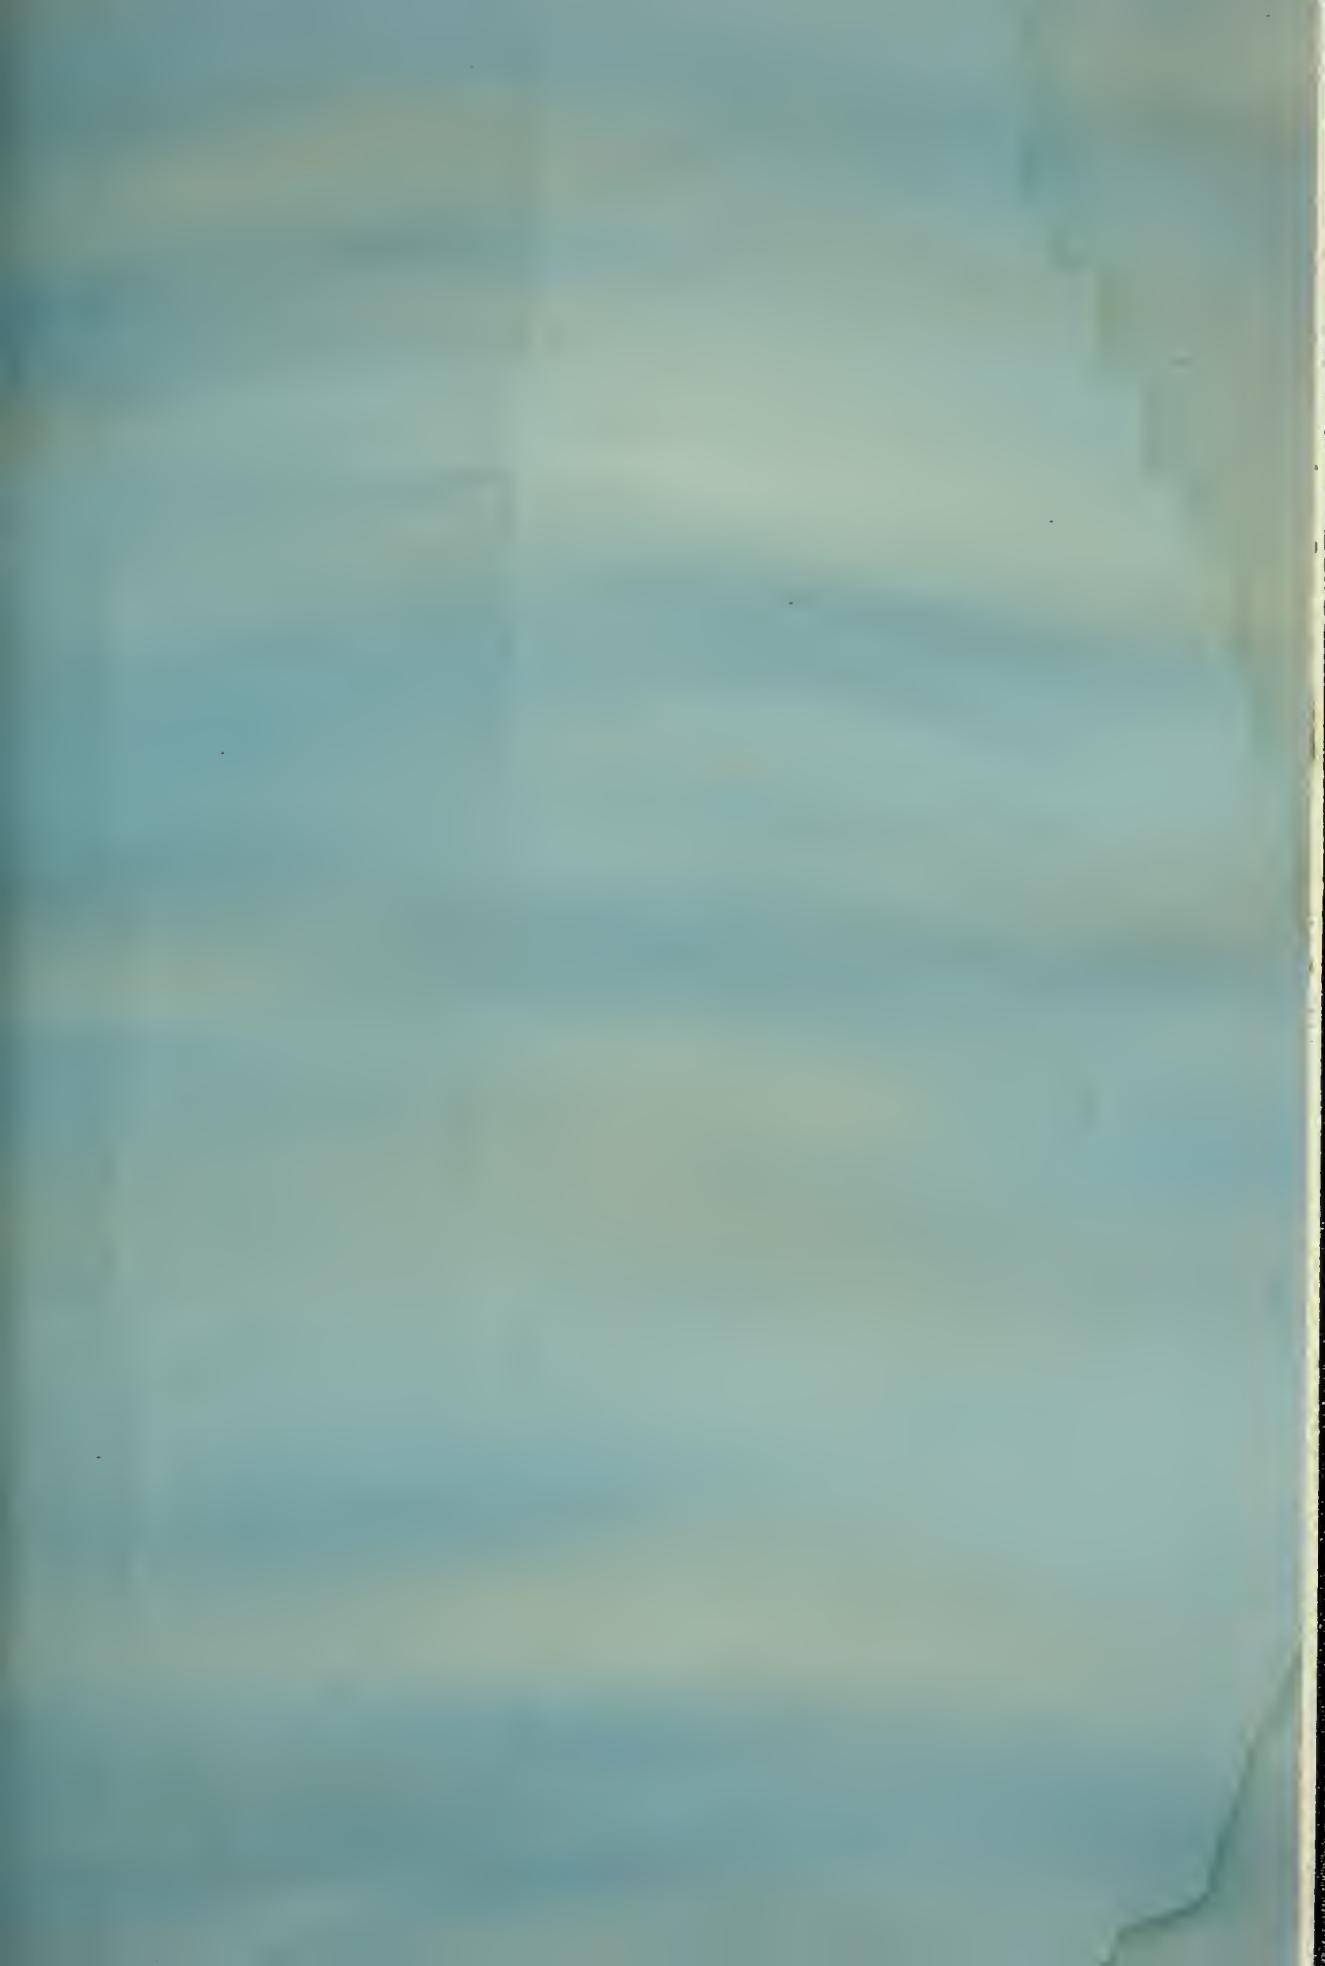

Some, no doubt, will go on farther
Till they've earned their L.L.D.
So in closing let me bid you
One more parting fond Farewell.

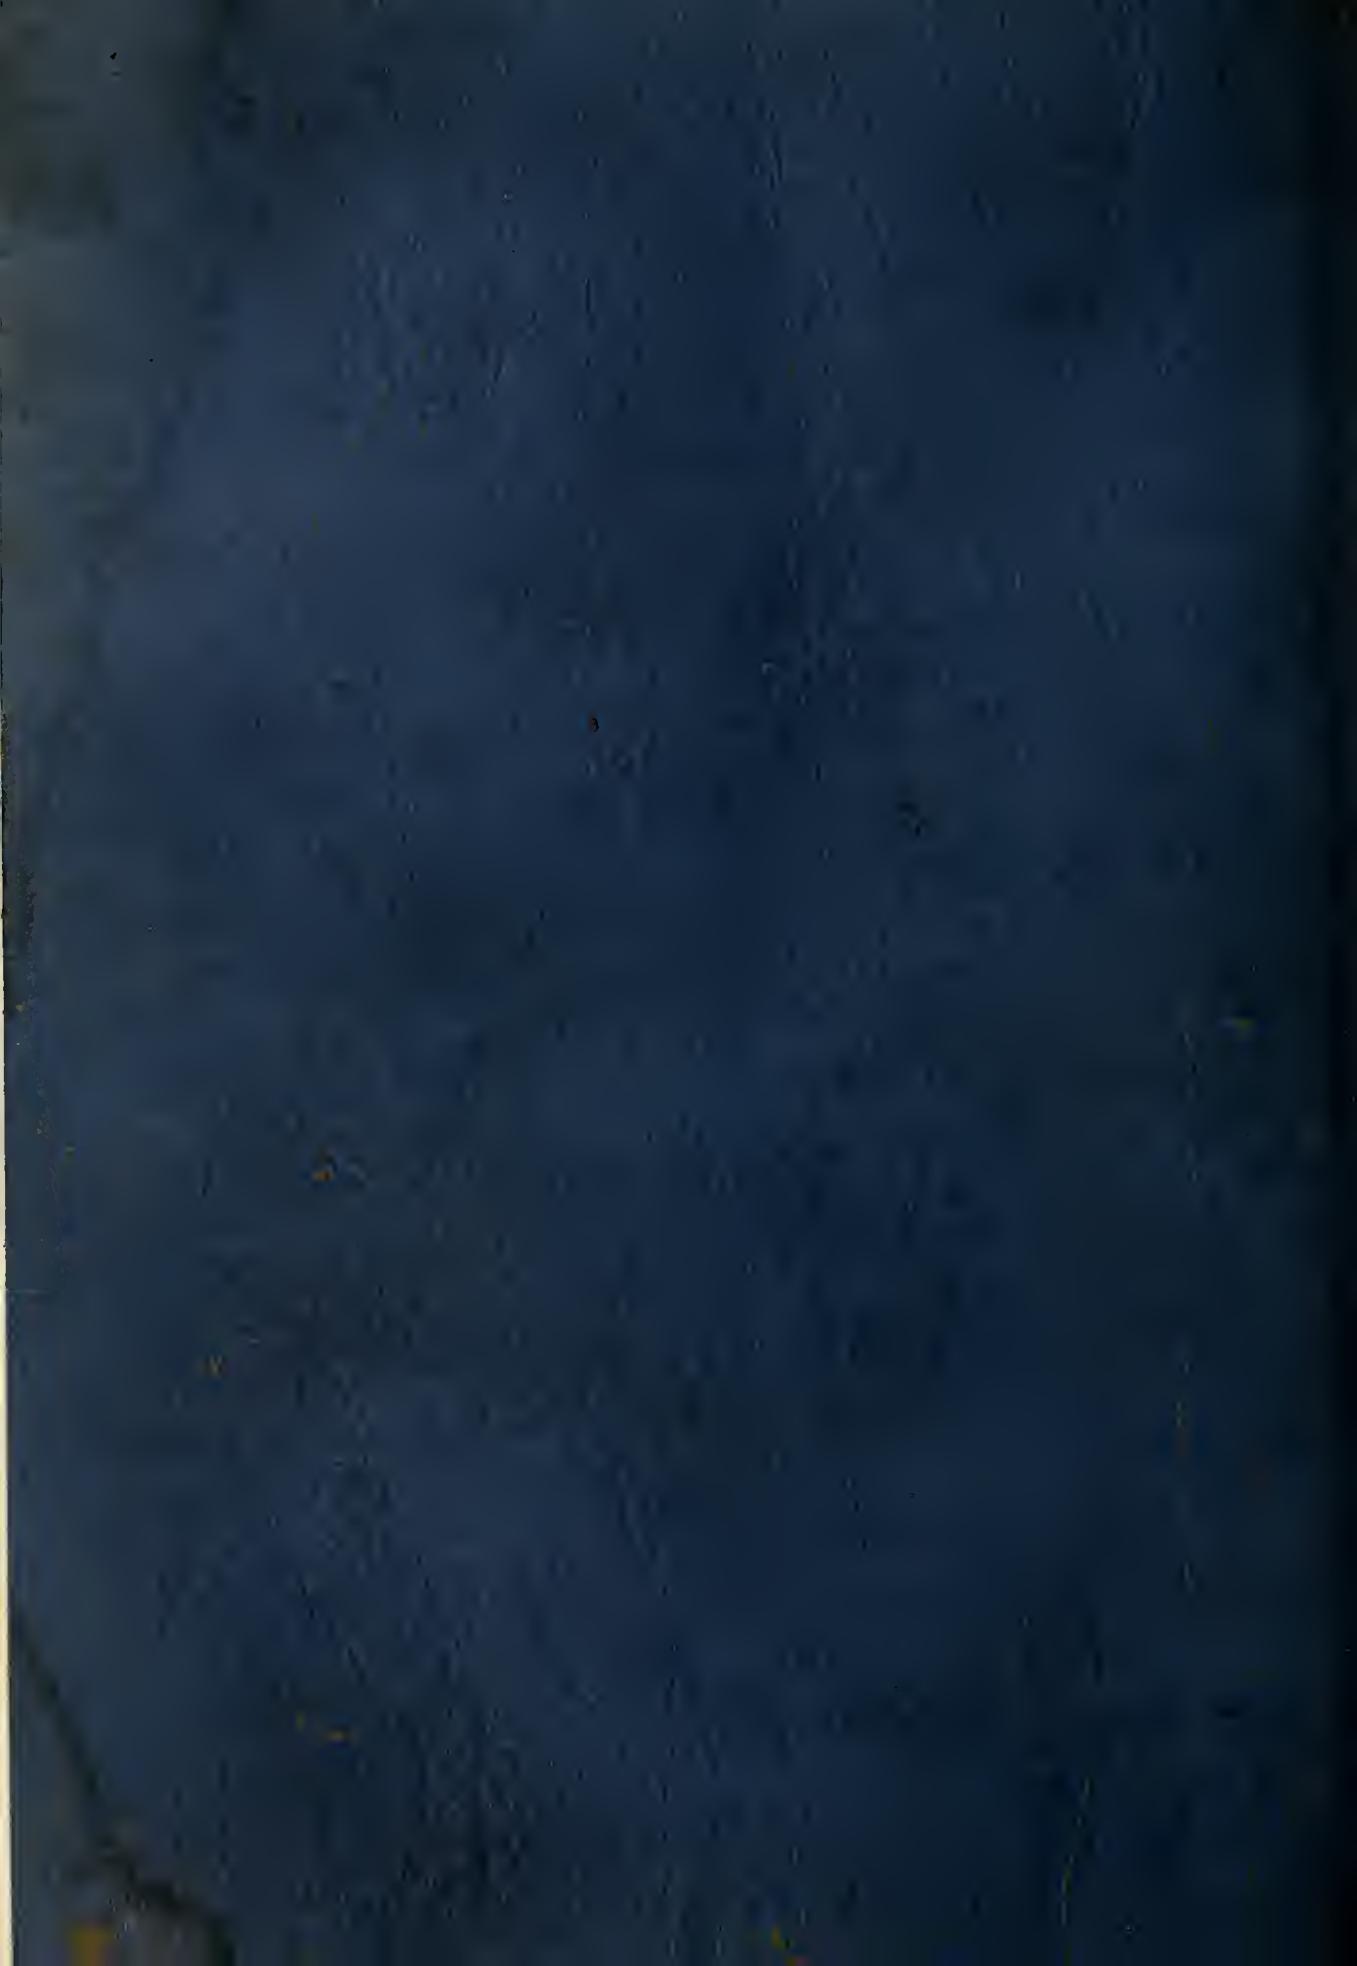

MARY BEULAH MYERS, '29.
